Account is holding to slightly down; the main contributing factor is the additional UVXY calls that I purchased several days ago before the rally ensued. Basically, I bought too many of them thinking the market would correct, which was clearly a mistake. What I also noticed is customers are picking better candidates, those that are moving very rapidly up whereas I have been more conservative, and this has cost me some gains. Watch the video to see more information on this.

The best candidates were selected for the following slides.

QQQ

We see that the Nasdaq has rallied 4 days in a row from support at $380 and now hitting resistance at 400, this rally has given way to some spectacular rockets that we will see in the candidates to follow. We don't know if the Nasdaq is going to bounce off the resistance at $400 or power through it. I am expecting hesitation and possibly a pullback to the middle of the range before a final breakout.

BITF

BITF has rallied off a support level at $4.40 with a strong bar today through CoralTrend. I would expect this to continue, however with low price stocks remember to reduce allocation. This stock has already gone up 25% in just a few days

CHWY has a very nice bullish pattern going through CoralTrend with a higher low formed and a solid break bar today on a gap indicating the potential for more upside movement.

Remitly global shows a nice saucer pattern and a launch bar with a start of a green CoralTrend. This indicates new bullishness has entered the stocks, which should continue. A stop on a trade like this should probably be set at the base of the break bar, around $20.
